In purges, Xi went from schoolboy to survivor

BEIJING
First taste of politics for Chinese leader came in Cultural Revolution

BY CHRIS BUCKLEY AND HEDY KREMER
When the maelstrom of the Cultural Revolution erupted, he was a slightly pudgy 13-year-old who loved classical Chinese poetry. Two years later, he left his city home to be sent to a farm in Guizhou, a province that had been a hotbed of Communist revolution. He had been purged a few years earlier, when his father, a high-ranking official, was killed and his family was sent to a remote mountain village. He was one of his father's children who survived the revolution and was named by his father as the future successor of the party. Mr. Xi, 48, was named to succeed President Hu Jintao in 2012. He has been seen in meetings with American capitalists in Seattle and in a state dinner at the White House in his honor, set for the first anniversary of his rise to power.

Over 700 die in hajj stampede near Mecca

BEIRUT, LEBANON
Accident renews fears that Saudi Arabia can't ensure safety for pilgrims

BY BEN HUBBARD AND NINA HOEDEGGER
In the deadliest tragedy to befall the annual pilgrimage to Mecca in decades, more than 700 people were killed on Thursday in a stampede near Islam's holiest site on one of the hottest days of the Muslim calendar, raising new questions about the Saudi government's ability to manage the annual influx of millions of pilgrims. The deaths occurred around 3 p.m. on the first day of Eid al-Adha, an anniversary in Mecca, about six miles east of Mecca, as millions of Muslims descended on the city for the hajj, one of the largest regular human migrations. Pope issues call to action

Pope Francis issued a call to action on Thursday. He defended immigration, pushed for environmental legislation and made a plea to abolish the death penalty.

In particular, Francis denounced a mission that generates a disproportionate share of the world's waste, to not be driven by decisions at the expense of humanity. "Pollution is, instead, an expression of our compelling need to live as one, in order to build as one, the greatest common good," he said at a joint meeting of Congress in an address that cited American environmental legislation. He also called for a "courageous" re-examination of the death penalty and a plea to abolish it. Pope Francis issued a call to action on Thursday. AFGHANS EXPAND MILITIAS ACCUSED OF RIGHTS ABUSES

BID TO COMBAT TALIBAN
Allies Worry the Forces Will Become Tools of Local Strongmen

By MUIB MASRAH
KABUL, Afghanistan — With the Afghan security forces gradually expanding the number of troops, the government is moving to rapidly expand the training of members of the Afghan militia, a move that has alarmed human rights groups, who say the militia, composed by the disaffected troops of the northern city of Kunduz, is being described by officials speaking privately as an attempt to boost off-patrol in Afghan cities threatened by the insurgents.

But the expansion also appears to be an open admission that the United States' main legacy in Afghanistan — the creation of a national police and army force — is falling apart. On Thursday, President Obama called off that patrol, originally set up in 2002, and 3,000 American troops in the country are set to leave by the end of the year.

Further, the plan would involve the creation of an entirely new force, expansion of the Afghan Local Police, an American-created force that in many areas of the country has become synonymous with human rights abuses even when directly supervised by the American Special Forces. Some of the NATO countries involved in Afghanistan have already expressed concerns about the move.

That recently requests for funding an expansion of that police force, a collection of local militias with around 30,000 total members, were reportedly turned down by the United States military. While the forces have performed well in some parts of the country, in other parts, the Kunduz, they are seen as a source of chaos and instability rather than security.

The Taliban have all of a sudden lost a run after Kunduz — they are abandoning plans for districts and making runs on cities and a major Afghan official, who like others interviewed about security spoke on the condition of anonymity to avoid political fallout.

Want Room to Name Their Price
A Lawsuit Challenges Guidelines on What to Pay Women

As the market for eggs has increased and put pressure on their price, so have high-end fertility clinics and egg-donor agencies are ignoring the guidelines and paying for more — on rare occasions in the US figures — while donors are shopping around to get the best price.

The lawsuit is raising awareness of the whole thing, and that's good, said Sierra Poole, a lawyer in Nebraska not involved with the case, and a founder of the online forum We Are Egg Donors. "The guidelines are skewed toward the intended parents, toward the industry making money," she said. "We're in America — the market would take care of itself without guidelines."

Mr. Poole, a three-time donor, is an example of how the market works. She was paid $10,000 for each of her first two donations in Kansas, but she was paid $15,000 for each of her last two in Chicago for the last. "The third time I donated, the only reason I was for the money," she said.

At market, she says, she was deeply concerned with mine safety, but she had committed to "ethical violations" of safety laws, typically done in their 20s.

Back in 2013, Bill de Blasio sought to differentiate himself from Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg. Now he prides himself publicly on the fact that he is a liberal Democrat, approaches the middle class, and has the ability to distinguish himself from the National Rifle Association.

Tapes Portray A Coal Patron's Ax on Safety
By SHERILYN GAY STEINBERG
CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Back when he was one of the most powerful and feared men in West Virginia, before a coal mine explosion killed 38 of his employees and exposed his company's shoddy safety record, Donald L. Blankenship was seen as an arrogant, micromanagering bully. Even his lawyer says he was "rude and insulting."

But in the end, another of his qualities — his penchant for secrecy regarding his own conversations — may help bring Mr. Blankenship down.

Mr. Blankenship is the former chairman and chief executive of Massey Energy, whose Upper Mer branch mine became, in April 2010, the site of the nation's deadliest coal mining disaster in nearly 40 years. Now on trial in federal court here, he is the first coal baron ever to face criminal charges — the central character, prosecutors say, in a historic case of conspiracy to flout health and safety laws in pursuit of profit.

Defense lawyers say they will prove that Mr. Blankenship was not deeply concerned with mine safety, but that he had committed no "willful violations" of safety laws, typically done in their 20s.

Back in 2013, Bill de Blasio sought to differentiate himself from Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg. Now he prides himself publicly on the fact that he is a liberal Democrat, approaches the middle class, and has the ability to distinguish himself from the National Rifle Association.

The timing of Mr. de Blasio's overtures is no accident. The mayor and his advisers have increasingly come to see the rift between Mr. de Blasio and Mr. Bloomberg as a damaging and unnecessary political liability — especially at a time when Mr. de Blasio's clashes with Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo, a fellow Democrat, have hurt his ability to push through important pieces of his agenda.

Turnberry Ocean Club

Located at 18501 Collins Avenue, Turnberry Ocean Club jets 54 stories into the heavens, along prime beachfront in Sunny Isles Beach, Florida. The Carlos Zapata/Robert Swedroe-designed high-rise masterpiece embodies the architecture and opulence of Miami's current "it" status. A luxury skyscraper as impressive as its Collins Avenue address, the eye-catching tower embraces the apex of Miami's modernity movement: an amalgamation of glass, steel and towering white pillars intersected by sleek protruding balconies as well as a duo of cantilevered 30th-floor swimming pools and an alfresco fitness center overlooking the ocean. Comprised of 154 grand three to six bedroom units, this project will deliver each residence with direct oceanfront and bay views and six stories of amenities, including the signature Sky Club. Ownership also affords membership privileges at the Turnberry Isle Country Club. Developer and CEO, Jeffrey Soffer of Turnberry Associates continues to redefine South Florida through the company's 50 years of experience.

Kerry warns climate deal will not be legally binding

- Split over Paris measures exposed
- Hostile US Senate spells uncertainty

Other nations over how to secure it is robust enough to shift billions of dollars of investment away from fossil fuels and towards greener energy. A spokeswoman for the European Commission said: "For us and for many other countries, we would like the Paris agreement to be in the form of a protocol or a treaty. That represents the strongest expression of political will and also for the future it provides predictability and durability."

Privately, EU officials acknowledge that the Obama administration is eager for a deal in Paris, but not one with legally binding measures because these could strengthen arguments that the deal needs approval from a hostile Senate.

But in an interview with the Financial Times, Mr Kerry said: "We are trying to reach an agreement that satisfies all negotiators to make the rules and standards legally binding, but not the rest in many of the climate treaties. There are 160 countries here that are particularly sensitive to the presidential election."

Between the Democrats and the Republicans running the House over the need for climate change.

Class apart Big tech takes over as MBA graduates shun banking careers

LAURA NOONAN — LONDON
NEW DELHI, INDIA — NEW YORK

Graduates from the world's top 10 business schools are 40 per cent less likely to choose a career in banking than they were before the multi-billion-dollar losses, trading scandals and shrinking pay packets of the past few years.

Analysis by the Financial Times of the career paths of graduates from the top 10 MBA programmes shows just 10.6 per cent are now choosing banking as a career compared with 17.4 per cent in 2008.

The 6.8 percentage point drop translates into a 40 per cent difference in banking's popularity before and after the financial crisis.

Wall Street's biggest banks, including Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan, have been displaced by tech companies such as Amazon and Google as graduates shun the uncertainty and long hours of finance in favour of more entrepreneurial professions, or employers such as the consultancy McKinsey.

The shift in sentiment stands in contrast to the pre-crisis boom years when Wall Street and the City of London dominated MBA recruiting. The biggest decline is at Harvard Business School, where the popularity of investment banking has fallen by more than half among its 5,000 job-seeking graduates.

"Banks are now much less appealing, especially in Europe," said Alan Johnson, managing director at pay consultant Johnson Associates. "The pay, the rules, the oversight, the politics, the bureaucracy — firms are not nearly as attractive as they used to be."

The fall in the popularity of banking has also outstripped that of the overall financial sector, which includes insurance and fund management, whose appeal has fallen by 25 per cent.

Challenges US tech rivals popping move in Europe

Companies ease European fears by opening more data centres in the continent since they were still expected to remain in the US, they added.

The software company said it has foreign customers to build up European facilities that are not just for the US market.

Microsoft's chief executive said: "We are committed to the data of European business customers, and we are committed to the privacy standards of our customers."
